Water: an integral element of our territory, which is crisscrossed by crystalline streams descending from eternal glaciers or gushing from rocky springs. The essential sap of life, but also an engine for economic development, and both aspects have coexisted in the Upper Valley since ancient times, as man has subjected the flow of water to his needs. This evolution is clearly visible during this stage, where you pass from the centuries-old buildings of the Old Baths, its thermal waters already exploited in Roman times, to the majestic dams supplying energy to metropolitan Milan. A landscape dominated by the roar of water in all its forms: waterfalls, streams, pools, and fountains--from drinking troughs to modern hydroelectric pipelines.
