After the small village of Monte take path N273, an uphill trail. The first stretch runs through a dense forest of fir trees and past the mountain huts of Campello to reach Campaccio. From here continue to the left along path N208 down towards the Alpe Zandilla. During summer this communal pasture accommodates livestock of various kinds, mainly cows and horses, while the pasture is also home to various herbs, including musk yarrow, much used in Alta Valtellina to produce a local digestivo check before picking plants. The forest contains plenty of wild blueberries and even edible mushrooms. Continue on path N273.1 between wide clearings and pastures and, after passing Pozzech and Brusadei, you cross the woods to the meadows near the houses of Monte.

Musk yarrow Achillea moschata. Also known as musk milfoil, this is a perennial plant of the Asteraceae family that grows from 1,400 metres to over 3,000 metres on slightly calcareous soils. It has very fragrant flowers which, like the leaves, are used in the preparation of bitters, digestive infusions and liqueurs.
